Blanchi was then taken to the scene of his double crime and stood facing Bertolino.

"Is this the man who killed her and shot you?" asked Policeman Heffernan of the wonaded man.

"Yes, he did." gasped Bertolino, and then lapsed into gilente, as if the effort to speak caused him pain.

The first shot fired by the murderer struck his wife in the right arm midway between the cloow and wrist. The next struck just under the heart and passed clear through. There was another hole in the right breast and another in the head, which might have been made by bullets or some sharp instrument.

Bertolino was shot clear through the left shoulder, right arm and in the back.
